I need some help with setting up a Cambridge Audio S90 sub and hope someone here can help..... Basically I started with a Tannoy SFX5.1 system but the sub blew so I replaced it with this, on the back of the SFX sub the volume and crossover knobs had AV/LFE markings on them so I knew exactly where to set them but this isn't the case with the S90.

We say dabble because that is all it is. The Cambridge Audio S70 is the only floor standing speaker that the company currently offers, and it is part of one of the two limited speaker series that it manufactures. With decades of experience manufacturing audio equipment, we expected a little more from Cambridge Audio.

The Cambridge S90 subwoofer is the perfect match for the S30 and S70 speakers. Finished in black with rounded edges, the S90 sub looks every bit as contemporary as the rest of the S-Series. Packing a long-throw bass cone, the S90 may be discreet and compact, but it can certainly pack a punch when needed - right the way down to 40Hz.

After doing a lot of research I ended up choosing the Cambridge Audio S80 due to the quality associated with Cambridge Audio as well as some of the reviews of the product. I have not been disappointed. It is a great size and does not dominate the room, but at the same time packs sufficient punch to bring out the depth of movies and music while ...
